*At my best,
I strive to capture and to convey evanescence for eternity
in a way that is unique and ephemeral,
yet universal and, somehow,
timeless, tangible and real.*

*I search for original perspectives
and steadfastly strive to cross the boundary of predictability
in the hope of encapsulating timeless epiphanies.*

Keoki Flagg

I fundamentally believe that for art to be Art, it has to be original.

In this new paradigm of digital mass proliferation and stereotypical visual clichés, I believe we must reclaim originality. After over three decades of photography, I no longer believe that it's all about being at the right place at the right time...Now, I've adopted a different approach; I surrender to the moment, embrace new technology, and digitally shoot multiple overlapping frames to encompass a broader field of view and translate best how one experiences evolving time immersed in Nature. It's not a static snapshot; it's about how it feels.

The result is a composited image of a singular shape/aspect ratio defined by the number of frames in the composition, the specific degrees in the field of view, and the duration of evolved time. These Pentimental images become a blend of moments far beyond what we see in the blink of an eye, but well within what we feel in our hearts. Made up of many moments of ongoing time, these artworks are impossible to mimic. They're always original works of Art.

Shooting like this, fully immersed and unable to see the results in real time, requires a leap of faith. But, trust the moment and the technology, do it right, get lucky, and, in the end, technology and technique disappear, magic happens, and The Moment resonates... Not a moment in time...Moments in Time...Time in a Moment.

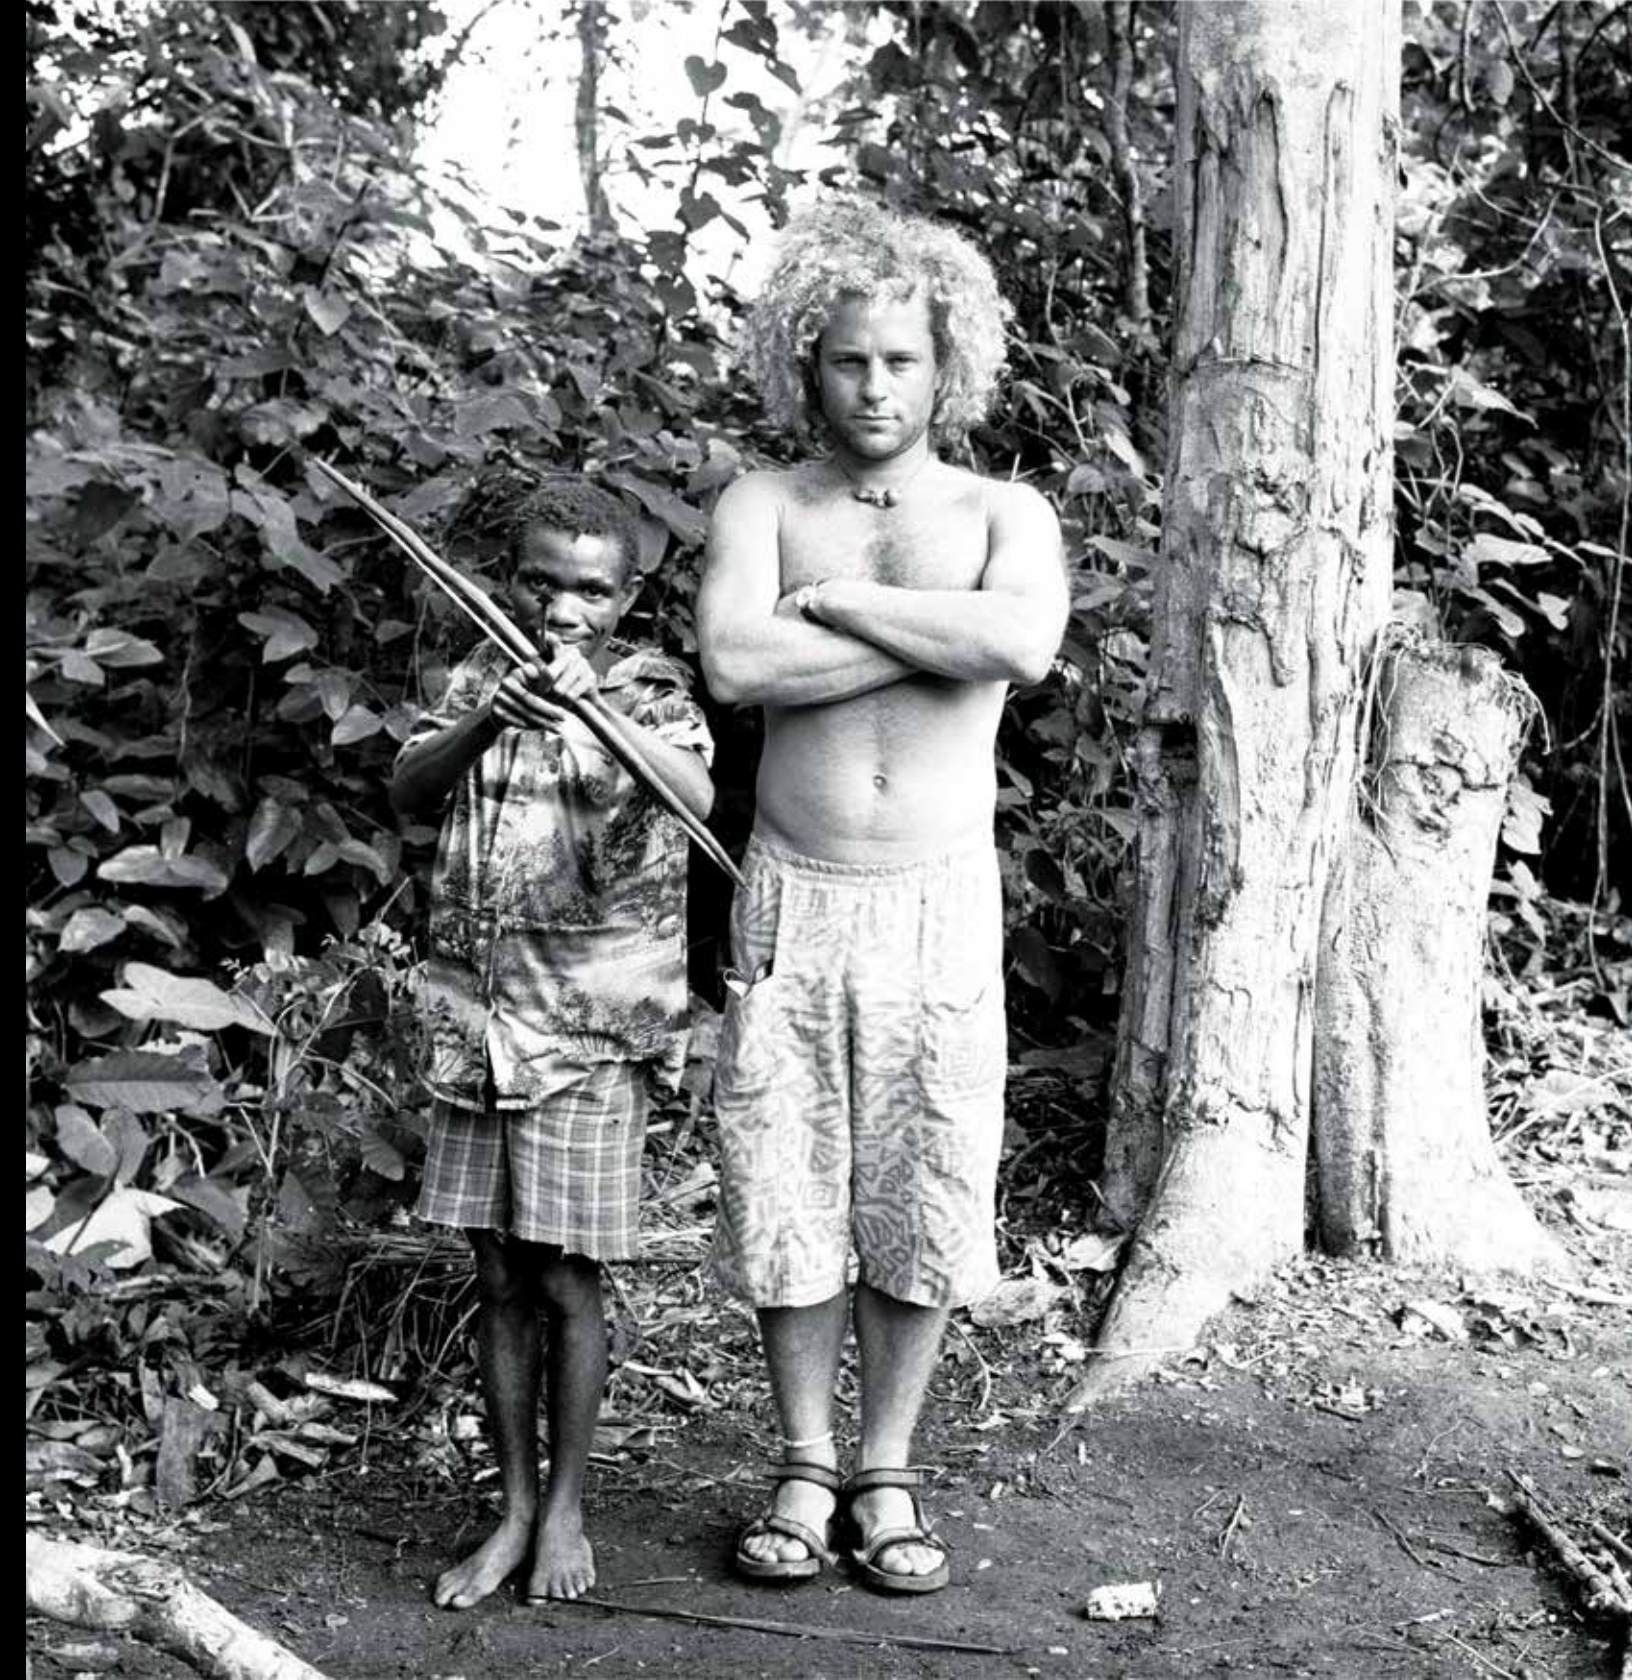

In the extremely rare, timeless moments that work, although shot digitally and realized in state-of-the-art face mount technology, the output is always true, old-school photographs, using chemical emulsions on archival photographic paper; then every work of Art is produced in very limited edition at perfect scale to fit each space. Some things change; some things shouldn't.
